Apresentação

This Master Programme thoroughly explores all fields of animation, from narrative and non-narrative storytelling to experimental uses of animation in expanded fields. RE:ANIMA is oriented towards a diverse and artistic approach to the field of Animation. It envisions the creation of an international community of animators who make multiple connections and create a network for future career endeavours. RE:ANIMA is fully taught in English and strives to shape a generation of high-level, critical and innovative artists, via the involvement of international professionals and a diverse selection of Animation experts and scholars. With the combination of the students' individual learning trajectory and a broad, multicultural orientation, RE:ANIMA assumes a unique presence in Europe, and strongly intersects with the needs of the animation film industry. Students will become familiarised with three entirely different locations, both socially, artistically and industry-wise, and will be continuously motivated to broaden their cultural horizon. This will provide them not only with a varied palette of skills in animation filmmaking, but also with an international network and orientation, which is invaluable in a sector where international co-production is at the heart of the industry. The integration of different forms of expanded animation into the programme is a new curricular feature which does not exist in traditional animation programmes that are usually oriented towards short film production with a narrow
