Presentation

The Master's Degree in Public Law and Regulation offers advanced training in the core areas of Public Law, with a strong emphasis on the contemporary challenges of economic regulation and public governance. This programme combines theoretical depth with an applied approach, equipping students to critically engage in legal, administrative and regulatory decision-making processes. The curriculum includes compulsory courses that cover key areas such as Public Regulation Law, State and Globalisation, Administrative Law and the European Union, and State, Law and Security. In addition, it offers a diverse set of optional subjects, allowing students to specialise in emerging topics such as Data Protection Law, Competition Law or Energy Law. The programme places particular emphasis on the development of research skills, through subjects such as Research Methodology and Dissertation Project, preparing students for scientific output and the development of independent legal thinking. With an experienced faculty and up-to-date content, the course meets the demands of a context in which the activities of the State, regulatory authorities and private operators increasingly rely on robust, transparent, and adaptable legal frameworks.
