Presentation

This course aims to train architects, professionals from related areas, or other technicians to intervene in development and humanitarian cooperation contexts, promoting sustainable and socially responsible solutions. It is aimed at anyone interested in consolidating their knowledge of theories and practices of cooperation in the context of joint intervention with all the actors on whom the necessary diagnosis and action depend. The partnerships established are intended to simulate the relationship between the different organisations that cooperate to guarantee the quality of life of the target communities. As the course is dedicated to a field of action that is little worked on, it presents innovative teaching methodologies. In this sense, emerging teaching and practical techniques are developed in the field of quality of life in the human habitat, offering a practical and theoretical approach to tackling challenges in vulnerable communities.
